2013-2014 retirees ready to begin new chapter

Twelve Plainview ISD employees retiring during the 2013-2014 school year were honored with a retirement reception held on May 20 at the Fair Theatre.

Retirees include Susan Blackerby, Leah Dayton, Jill Freeman, Patsy Hall, Carrie Hare, Kim Mires, Richard Rangel, Kenneth Sjogren, Sandy Smith, Maria Sheetz, Vickie Stokes, and Linda Strickland.

Dr. Rocky Kirk, Superintendent of Schools, thanked the retirees for their service to the district.

"We should probably rename this a chapter ceremony. It's just a new chapter in your life," he said. "I pray God will be good to you and honor your contribution and I thank you on behalf of the administration and the Board of Trustees.

The Human Resource Services Department, under the leadership of Executive Director Brandy Merrick, hosted the reception. They presented gifts of appreciation to the retirees.

Entertainment was provided by members of the PHS Choral Department. They performed a variety of songs from the Red, White & Blue Revue held earlier this month.

Houston School Student Council Officers served as ushers for the event .

Greg Brown, Executive Director of Administration, was master of ceremonies. He shared biographical information on each of the retirees:

Blackerby, PHS special Susan populations liaison for the Career Technical Education Department, retired after 27 years with Plainview ISD. She previously served the district as a special education / transition teacher, a business education teacher and the student accounting technology specialist. Susan is already busy with responsibilities as a newly elected member of the city council, but plans to travel and spend more time with her grandkids in retirement. advice to new teachers: "Enjoy it.

Don't let it be a drudgery. Love your kids. Do something for yourself. Don't let your job be your world."

Leah Dayton, d i s t r i c t Instructional Coach, is retiring after a career of 19 years in education. She began her career as an English and History teacher at Houston School, taught Language Arts at Estacado Jr. High, and was a reading intervention and language arts teacher at Lakeside 5th Grade Learning Center. She holds a district record the record of being voted Educator of the Year by her campus peers seven times. Leah plans to spend more time with her family and friends in Her words of wisdom retirement. to new teachers: "Don't ever give up. It's not about giving up; it's about getting better and hanging on while you become stronger. Every year brings new opportunities and new possibilities."

Jill Freeman, fifth grade social studies teacher at Edgemere, is retiring following a 23-year career in education. She spent ten years at Thunderbird teaching first, second, and fourth grades before moving to Lakeside where she taught science and social studies to fifth grade students for 12 years. Last fall, she returned to Edgemere where she first began her career in education. Prior to earning her teaching degree, she worked as an aide at Edgemere for a year. Freeman is looking forward to traveling, spending more time with family, finishing some projects that she started, and may work parttime. Her words of wisdom to new teachers: "Don't think this is an 8-4 job, but don't let it rule your life either. Watch veteran teachers and learn from them, they have some wisdom. Let your students know you love them - you may be the most stable person in their lives.

Have fun while you teach and your students will be more willing to learn. Cherish the friendships you make with other teachers. Pray for your students daily and for yourself that you will be the kind of teacher your students need."

Patsy Hall, Hillcrest second grade teacher, retired in January after a 25-year career in education. She was a bus driver for two years and an assistant for eight years at College Hill, La Mesa and Lakeside while she pursued her college degree. She resigned to complete her student teaching and after graduation taught in Kress and Ralls before returning to Plainview in 1999 to teach 4th grade at Hillcrest. Patsy is spending her days babysitting her youngest granddaughter, Olivia. She and her husband Walter are planning a trip this summer to take their grandson Cooper to Mt. Rushmore, Little Big Horn, Yellowstone and through the Tetons. Her advice to new teachers: " New teachers should know teaching isn't an easy career, but it is very rewarding. Don't spend all your extra hours at school. Family comes first!"

Carrie Lyn Hare, Edgemere second grade teacher, is retiring from a career spanning 28 years in education. She has been with the district for three years and previously taught kindergarten at Hillcrest. She was a speech therapy teacher for Amarillo ISD and Sunray ISD. She also taught first and second grades in Comal ISD in San Antonio. Hare is looking forward to spending more time (continued on page 4) with family during her retirement. Her words of wisdom to new teachers: "I would say you are taking on the most important job in the world and our future relies on you. Prepare for a stimulating, fun career as there is never, ever a boring day! Have fun!"

Kim Mires, La Mesa early childhood teacher, retired earlier this year from a 28-year career as an educator in the district. She taught 6th grade at Ash Learning Center and pre-kindergarten at Edgemere Elementary before moving to the La Mesa position.

Richard Rangel, retired from a 25 -year career as an attendance officer for the district.

Kenneth Sjogren, AE / SURGE Teacher at Houston School, is retiring following a 16-year career in education. Kenneth served the district as a science teacher at Coronado for 14 years before moving to Houston School to teach science. Kenneth plans to spend more time playing with his grandkids and possible substitute teach. His words of wisdom: "Never give up hope. Tomorrow is a new day."

Sandy Smith, art teacher at PHS, is retiring after a career of 27 years in education. She taught in Lubbock for 4 years before joining the district 23 years ago. She hopes to have the opportunity in retirement to travel and spend time fly-fishing with her husband Dennis. She also plans to see more of her grandchildren and her mother who lives in Southlake. Her words of wisdom to new teachers: "Look for support from your mentor and veteran teachers. Keep your mind open to new ideas but value your beliefs. Get away from the classroom and re-energize yourself. Make time for yourself and find time for your family and friends."

Maria Sheetz, Spanish teacher at Estacado Middle School, is retiring following a 13-year career with the district. She began her career as a computer lab assistant at Hillcrest for a few months before moving into her current position. Prior to her educational career she worked for the MHMR Center for 21 years. Her retirement plans are to follow the Lord's lead, play with her grandchildren and travel. Her words of wisdom "God places us where he wants us to serve. He always gives us what it takes to do the job well."

Vicki Stokes, La Mesa second grade teacher, is retiring following a 29-year career in education. She taught first grade for three years at Hale Center, taught at Estacado for two years, and has spent 24 years teaching at la Mesa. She plans to use her retirement to travel, play with her grandson, read, garden, and enjoy new adventures with her husband and family. Her words of wisdom to new teachers: "Enjoy each day of teaching and give it your best. Laugh with your students and make sure they know you care about them and that you will be there for them. Be flexible and open to new ideas and changes. You can make a difference in your student's lives one day at a time. Hope, believe, and you can achieve!"

Linda Strickland, PHS health science teacher, is retiring after a 17-year career in education, six of those years with Plainview ISD. Prior to joining the district, she was a school nurse in Frenship ISD and Amarillo ISD. Her retirement plans include enjoying the outdoors and her grandchildren. Her words of wisdom to new teachers: "Remember that you can do no good for others, if you do not take care of yourself and HAVE FUN!"

Staff Spotlight: Christie Flinn

It has been said that a Renaissance woman views the world with curiosity. To her everything has possibilities and she seeks out opportunities to learn new things and acquire new knowledge.

If Edgemere third-grade teacher Christie Flinn, isn't yet this woman, she is well on her way.

Christie attended school in Tulia, Dimmitt, Canadian before her family moved to Burleson so that dad could attend Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary. Her dad graduated Seminary year the same she graduated from high school.

During high school in 1991, she had the opportunity to met one of her favorite Jimmy Stewart. actors, Stewart was in Ft. Worth for a book signing and Christie skipped a day of school to see him and buy a copy of his book. When Stewart's limo pulled up, the movement of the crowd gathering to meet the star. pushed Christie into the limo. She opened the limo door for Stewart and in he escorted her turn, signed three inside and copies of his book for her. When she returned to school her principal was ready to send her to ISS for skipping. He didn't believe someone her age would love old movies enough to skip school for Stewart's book signing so Christie gave the principal a signed copy of Stewart's book, keeping one for herself and one for her grandmother.

Following high school, she attended Texas Wesleyan University where she majored in Political Science. She admired Barbara Walters and savs that is probably the reason she went into political science and pursued the opportunity to travel study abroad. During her college studied years, she Middle East Politics in Israel.

"It was the experience of a lifetime," she said. "I was privileged enough to be chosen to present a paper I wrote on African Genocide to the Women's Caucus at the Southwest Social Science Convention."

She originally planned to become an attorney, but began substitute teaching on days she didn't have classes. That led to the realization that teaching was her calling.

"I fell in love with teaching," she said.

She began her teaching career 12 years ago in Grandview ISD and has taught 3rd, 4th, and 5th grade students.

Christie moved back to this area last summer to be closer to her parents who live in Tulia. This is her first year working for Plainview ISD.

"I have the most amazing job in the world. I love coming to work every day. I work with some of the most wonderful kids that I have ever met. "

Like most teachers she appreciates the opportunity she has to impact the lives of her students.

"There is nothing that is more rewarding than seeing the excitement on the face of a child who has struggled to learn something and then they finally figure it out. Their faces literally glow."

Christie adds that every year she grows to love her new students as if they were her own and when the year is over misses them.

Christie has three daughters. Her oldest daughter Courtney is 19. Courtney married her high school sweetheart, Garrett Chambers, last September. He is in the Army Airborne and they are stationed at Ft. Bragg, NC.

Her second daughter Thalia will be a freshman next year and her youngest daughter Jenna will enter 7th grade. Both daughters attended Estacado Middle school this year.

They are a close family and Christie says she spends most of her time with her kids and taking them to and from their activities.

Early this year, she and her girls moved to a home in the country where they have been busy hatching chicken eggs, caring for their new goats and preparing the soil and planting a garden.

So what is on her bucket list?

She says she would still like to follow in Barbara Walters footsteps, but has other goals that might be easier achieved.

"I would like to teach high school social studies, government and economics. I would also like to ride in a helicopter and I would like to travel to Europe."

She already has some travel plans for this summer.

She will be going on a mission trip to Turkey in July with the First Baptist Church in Tulia.

Coronado students discover history treasure

(This article was printed in the Plainview Herald and is being reprinted with permission of the author, Gail Williams. Those of us who have had the privilege of knowing Anna Trusler know how kind and special she is, but you might not know the rest of her story.)

When Jennifer King told her students to find out what member of the Coronado Middle School staff was American, Native she promised "something great" would happen for them. By this she meant a special privilege, or maybe a stick of gum. But the eighth-graders quickly learned that "something great" was really the privilege of getting to know about assistant librarian Anna Trusler and her family history.

Trusler, 63, is threequarters Native American, mostly Cherokee. She grew up in Tahlequah, Okla., where, she said, she didn't know a white person until she was in high school. Though the soil around Tahlequah didn't produce much, it grew abundance of strawberries, and as a child she joined the other pickers.

"We'd stand in the road, and the farmer would come by and pick us up in his truck," Trusler said.

Trusler can't remember exactly when she learned that her ancestors had been part of the Trail of Tears, а forced migration b y government officials southeastern United States, including Florida and Georgia, to Oklahoma. Her greataunt Kat, she said, was the family historian and had talked about the event from the time she was small.

Though she is unsure of the details, Trusler said her great-great-grandparents died on the trail, but her great-grandmother survived. Since her grandmother died giving birth to Trusler's own mother, it was only through Aunt Kat that she was unable to learn more about her great-grandmother.

Trusler makes the lesson concrete for the students by showing them Cherokee darts made of a thistle found in Oklahoma and bound together with animal sinews. The darts, blown through a pipe, were accurate from 20 to 30 feet and were used for hunting small game.

The Trail of Tears came about as a result of The Indian Removal Act of 1830 under President Andrew Jackson.

The four students who took advantage of their history teacher's offer all have some Native American in their backgrounds, as does King.

"It was beautiful," said Jeramyah Juanes, speaking of the lands the people were removed from, "grassy and lush." By contrast, he said, the land they were removed to was dry, and they were not allowed to take any of their possessions with them.

"Andrew Jackson was an Indian hater," Viviana Gonzales said. With prompting from King and Trusler, she and Jeramyah, along with fellow students Matthew Kelly and Dominic Silva, describe what the Trail of Tears must have been like.

"They were tired and hungry." "A lot of people died." "Their shoes were worn out, so they walked barefoot." "Some of them got blood infections." "Some of them were too old or too weak to survive."

All of this contrasts with Jackson's image as a politician for "the common man," King reminds them, and the Trail of Tears came about in spite of the fact that the Declaration of Independence states "All men are created equal." Native Americans who went to Washington to protest the removal were ignored.

In general, the students don't believe the same thing can happen now. Current laws and protections will prevent such a thing, they say. King says in the next unit, they will study the 13th. 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution which abolished slavery, guaranteed equal protection under the law prohibited the government from denying citizens the right to vote.

All of the students are interested in learning more about their own ancestry. King plans to encourage this with lessons involving ancestry.com.
